Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from Some Obstacles to Regional Cooperation in Central America for the Joint Development of Computer Technology Programs There has been a very marked trend towards political and economic integration throughout the whole world within the last few decades, as indicated by the emergence of such organizations as the European Economic Community (EEC), the European Free Trade Association (EFTA), Latin American Free Trade Association (LAFTA), East African Common Market (EACH), the Central American Common Market (CACM), and, others. Whether the reason for this movement lies in a natural response of groups of nations to the economic pressures of the superpowers, or as the route to international harmony, or as an instrument of accelerated development, or other reasons or combinations of reasons, it is obviously an important phenomenon affecting nations and their dealings with one another. At the same time economic development has been the stated primary goal of most governments in the less advanced countries. While keeping in mind some of the observations and warnings made by authors like Furtado and Gunder Frank, it is nonetheless through the rapid development of the economic resources of a nation that many of the tragic ills besieging the poorer countries may be attenuated or eventually eliminated. Technology has a very important function in bringing about development, and computer technology in specific, even more so.
