Excerpt: . 162 chapter viii. summary of preceding argument. There is nothing so revolutionary, because there is nothing so unnatural and so convulsive to society, as the strain to keep things fixed when all the world is, by the very law of its creation, in eternal progress; and the cause of all the evils in the world may be traced to that natural but most deadly error of human indolence and corruption, that our business is to preserve and not to improve. --Db. Arnold. Our task, now drawing to a close, has been a somewhat ungrateful one. The nature of the subject has compelled us to dwell chiefly on the defects of Quakerism, to disclose its weak points, to exhibit the mistakes of its defenders, and to trace the connection existing between such mistakes and its present decrepit condition. It would have been a more inviting employment, but a less useful one, to have unfolded the happier aspects under which Quakerism has displayed itself; to have shown how much it really has accomplished for the cause of truth, and how beneficially it has influenced the theology of the whole professing Church; to have told of its noble struggle for liberty of conscience, of its practical philanthropy, of its zeal for popular education, of its unfaltering protest against war; or to have painted a lovely, because a faithful, picture of the exceeding happiness that dwells round hundreds of Friends' firesides. But such a course would have...
